Course Outline

2 CEU's

Establishing a lifetime of good oral health begins before birth. The US Surgeon General stated that dental caries in our pediatric population is one of the most serious health concerns in this country. Early prevention and intervention are the keys to ending this "silent epidemic." Join fellow clinicians to discuss the components of establishing a "dental home" by the child's first birthday and break down the barriers of treating young patients. Learn the importance of a pediatric dental risk assessment and new strategies to utilize that assessment. Examine the latest information on fluoride treatments for the preschool child and the most current data on xylitol as a preventive agent. Today, not only parents but extended families are involved in raising children. Be a part of the solution and find out how every practice can play a part in ending this "silent epidemic."
